HOW A DOLLAR GREW

Mistory of a Prize Dollar Won by a Little tions. Girl in a Press Story Contest

GREW RAPIDLY FROM $1.00 TO $41.85

Murphysboro, Ill., Feb 9th. DEAR EDITOR:-If you will allow me space in your valuable paper will tell you how a dollar grew.

Some two or three years ago you requested the little folks to write stories to the Press. So after reading several stories from the little children, I decided to write one.

While I was trying to think of some subject to write on, I noticed a wren's nest in a carpet that was hanging on the garden fence. So while I was helping mamma or answering my little crippled sister I thought I would write a story "A Wren's Nest in a Carpet." I wrote it and sent it in and after waiting some three or four weeks I saw that my story was published. Imagine how proud I felt, if you can, when I saw my story in the Press. Oh, how happy I felt! Well, as days and months went by I saw in the Press that the Editor wanted my address, said I was the winner of third prize which was a dollar. So I tried to buy a pig with the dollar but could find no dollar pigs, so I loaned the dollar out for six months and took for interest fifteen eggs. I set the eggs under one of mamma's hens and raised ten chicks and sold them for $3.00; took $2.40 and bought two pigs, kept them a little over a year and sold them for $41.85.

So, Mr. Jenkins, I thought you would like to know what I did with the dollar. I would like to know what the other little folks did with their money.

Wishing the Press success I remain, your little friend

VIRGIL LOVE.

TEXAS LANDS.

Canyon City, Tex., Jan. 10, 1907. DEAR EDITOR: -- Will you permit me to say to your readers, a few things about our country. When I was in old Crittenden last June on a visit for my first time since leaving there in 1875 I was very forcibly impressed with the need of many of your citizens, seeking a new country and doing so at once.

WHERE BABY WENT

Mistake of Farmer's Wife Who Thought Bear Was Husband.

Afton, Va., Feb. 8. - Mrs. James Ingram, wife of a young tarmer, lost her infant in a fearful manner a few days ago. It was agreed that her husband should meet her at a fence near a small body of woods, take their child and accompany her to the home of a neighbor, where there was to be a dance. When the young woman reached the fence she saw a figure dimly outlined on the sother side. Believing it to be her husband she handed the child over as she climbed the lower panel.

To her amazement the figure disappeared without a word, taking the baby with it. Frantic with fear, she called her husband, whom she met coming toward the fence. The alarm was given and a search made, but nothing could be found except the tracks towards the mountains. There is no doubt but that the bear devoured the child.

St. Valentine's

A Story of Cupid's Day By VIRGINIA LEILA WENTZ

[Copyright, 1906, by E. C. Purcells.] UT, my dear girl, it's only for one night"- the manager began to expostulate.

I'm from the grave. My trouble is Bright's merely firm, and you'll have no Lady

Miss Miranda of the Titian tinted locks had been consigned to a bad dressing room, a tiny partitioned space three flights up, with a leak in the roof that let the water through, and it was raining!

"Never mind, dear," said Miss Marion Gray, the Juliet of that night's performance. "You may share my dressing room.'

"Well, fix it up between you, girls," admonished Mr. Washington Cohen, makes it a favorite with sufferers from with a wave of his hand and a sigh of rheumatism, sciatica, lame back, lum- relief. "Uh-huh," repeated Miranda, energetface. "I'm glad it's Kansas City, because my best beautiful lives there, and, being St. Valentine's day-well, I'm going to sit right down as soon as hind. I'm through here and warn him to have something pretty spanking nice for me."

St. Valentine's day! Had it really come around again? Later, waiting in stance. She smiled for a moment softthe cold, windy wings for her cues, the thought of it stayed with Marion. How vividly she recalled the day two years ago! Instinctively her fingers closed on a little hard substance close to her

"At what again?" tossed back Miranda over her shoulder.

"That perfect face, my dear lady," bowed he, with mock gravity. "Why paint the lily, why retouch the rose?" quoth he blandly, going on his way. Just then came a loud knock at the character man's dressing room, a few

Her eye fell on Miranda's letter. Why shouldn't she, Marion Gray, write a letter too? Again her fingers tightened on that little, hard, hidden subly, capriciously. Then, almost reverently, she drew it out to the length of her chain. It was a small silver heart, locked with a silver key. The face that looked at her from the nonths since she had allowed herself peep at it, but now-why, almost he teemed to be speaking to her in his ow, tender southern drawl.

"Yes, if you've set your heart on it, dear," he was saying, "I reckon you'll tiently with my work, loving you jus the same. Who knows? Some day my little Marion may want me, and I must lay up against that day."

"For heaven's sake, let the old cloak go and come in and have a beer!" came hoarsely from the character man's dressing room.

"I'm busy," the girl called back vaguely. She was listening to the voice of the man looking up at her from the locket.

"My little sweetheart is one of those who must go out into the world and buy experiences for themselves," the low voice was explaining, half to itself and half to her. "Those who hinder her are only burting her. But some

As the girl's beautiful, tired eyes rested again on Miranda's envelope she rose, as though under a spell, and, taking one more long look at the face in the locket, she kissed it with a little joyful half sob. Then she detached the silver key.

When Miranda came back into the dressing room there was another sealed note lying beside her own waiting to be mailed.

In Kansas City just before the half hour call was given one of the stage hands rapped on Miss Gray's door and handed her a violet box tied with violet ribbons.

Marion opened it, with a sudden, exquisite thought springing into her mind and making her dizzy with sheer joy. Her pale cheeks went pink, like the flush of a wild rose, as she searched the box feverishly for the card.

Ah, there it was! And the old fa miliar handwriting! She stood perfectly still for a few moments, trembling visibly. A Poet's Corner were filled with valentines. One of the merchants told me this was the best valentine market in North Dakota; said In Valentines

By ROBERTUS LOVE

HE poet and the funny man two in onea lively little city in North was doubly stalled, being both snow bound and broke. Either chain would hold him for some days to come. To get out of town he had first to get out of his botel by paying his bill. This, lowever, was a delicate secret which se had no intention of sharing with ais landlord, who looked upon him as s celebrity. But getting out of town was impossible even to a multimillionaire. The railroads were tightly tied up in all directions by vast drifts of packed snow in the deep cuts, and the snow was still falling and still drift-

It was not his own fault that the poet and the funny man was fundless. He had counted upon reaching the next town and collecting a fat fee for an entertainment which he was to give there before his money gave out. Now, he knew that he would miss his date and that he must "jump" 460 mortal miles to his next engagement, and he must buy railroad transportation for the jump. The poet was melancholy over his prospects, and even the funny man was feeling almost blue. It is a bandy thing to be a funny man as well as a poet, for the ability to appreciate the humor of a situation-well, that belps some.

But now the funny part was all bured, like the trains in the snow packed guts, and it was only the melancholy poet who sat in the office of the Grand Central hotel and looked blue. Nonchalantly he glanced at the big calenfar above the clerk's desk. The letters on the sheet read, "February 10."

"Huh!" the poet grunted. "Close to Et. Valentine's day, but I guess there'll be no valentine for me. Wires all fown. Can't get in touch with the lecture bureau or anybody else for the touch' that I so long for. I'm here for week anyhow if this snow keeps up and just 30 cents in my pocket. Well, I feel like 30 cents." And here the funny man came up to the surface for a brief

"Awfully," agreed the funny man, "What are we going to do about it, Blank?" anxiously inquired the poet, with a long face.

"Oh, we'll see. Let's take a look around town."

Arm in arm the two platform enterewirling, sweeping snow. They strode down the main street-persons of their profession, you know, always strideand glanced into the store windows.

A glimmer of intelligence pervaded the poet's countenance.

Then a light that never was on sea er land illumined the features of the chalk talker. He struck an attitude was stalled in that was striking indeed.

The merchant was to serve as press agent, do the paid advertising, keep mum as to the contract and let them do the rest.

Four busy nights and days followed for Messrs. Bard and Blank in their rooms at the hotel. Blank drew valentines and Bard wrote valentine poems by the hundreds.

By the morning of Feb. 11 the whole town was aware and agog. It was an event, an epoch. The two daily papers, carrying full page advertisements, vied with each other in giving free news space to the novel experiment.

"The celebrated poet and artist," editorially remarked one of the papers, "have kindly consented to see that this town, in spite of the distressing storm, shall not go valentineless. Art and genius come to the aid of love. They are indeed our friends in need."

When the funny man in a moment's respite from the poet's terrific labors glanced at this squib he doubled up with laughter.

"We are indeed in need," he said softly, "but they don't know it, and if Mr. Merchant keeps his agreement they won't."

As the valentines fell like autumn leaves from pen and pencil they were displayed in the big show windows. The sale was like a bargain rush. Toward the last the autograph valentines were auctioned off. The bidding was most spirited. One of the poet's most touching quatrains, written and signed in exactly two minutes, on a big sheet, with a red heart drawn and signed by the chalk talker in thirty seconds, was aughing a muffled, mournful laugh. knocked down to the town's most eligible bachelor for $30. A "comic" which hit the fancy of the new postmaster because he perceived that it would "hit" his late hated rival went for $7.50. And a train got in the day after St. tainers went out into the whirling. Valentine's! As poet and chalk talker paid their bills from the $271.10 which each received as his share of the proceeds from this nefarious scheme the funny man came out boldly from temporary retirement and murmured soft-

A Funny Valentine

By FRANK H. SWEET

DID you ever find a Valentine Beside you in your bed, When you heard your papa saying, "Wake up, my sleepy head! Wake up, wake up! your eyes will shine To see your funny Valentine ?"

DID you ever have a Valentine All soft and warm and sweet, With a little rolly poly head And mites of hands and feet-Wrapped up in a flannel, oh! so tight,

And 'fraid of one wee bit of light?

WITHOUT A TOOTH TO BITE ITS BREAD.

DID you ever have a Valentine (My sakes! I want to laugh) So heavy that they said it weighed Just nine pounds and a half, Without a tooth to bite its bread Nor any hair upon its head?

HAD one just this morning And 'twas such a sweet surprise To hear my papa saying, "Wake up, dear sleepy eyes ! This funny little Valentine Is mamma's baby, yours and mine !"

the size of the crowds is considered. For the past two seasons the number waists. of visitors on Saturdays when the weathat was favorable averaged over 300,-000 persons, while on occasions like the Fourth of July and Labor Day conservative estimates fixed the number at over 500,000, taxing the full capacity of every method of transportation afforded by the city, which has the most extensive and comprehensive system of transit in the world.

New York leads the nation in many respects, and in no one more than in the amusement line, for all that is new in that line seeks the approval of the New tage of being easier to fasten and un-York public, and after that has been fasten than those with humps. secured there is little doubt of its success, for there is no more critical or cosmopolitan public anywhere than in New York City. Other cities have built resorts on similar lines to those followed in the new Coney Island, and at thi time there are nearly two thousand amusement parks in successful opera tion, many of them having smaller re-productions of the features that have made Coney Island famous.

At each of these resorts the manage nent tries to secure the best possib eature, and in this way Coney Islan has had a national effect on amusemer enterprises, and has bred a taste for at tractions that are high in class and in truction. Everywhere there is a steady demand for novelty, something new, something bigger, better and grander than before and the demand must be supplied. The best work of talented ninds is constantly called for, and the agenuity of the inventor is taxed to the utmost to meet the emergency.

And there is money in it for the men who have combined the work of the electrician, the architect and the mechanic. Fortunes have been made and new fortunes await the man who gives the public something that will bring pleasure; diversions no longer meet the demand of the public, for the American pride asks for instruction as well as dispreasured and their agent themselves the public for the American pride asks for instruction as well as dispreasured and their agent themselves the public for the American pride asks for instruction as well as dispreasured as their agent themselves the public something that will bring themselves the public something that will be public something the public something themselves the public something that will be public something the public something themselves the public something the public something the public something themselves the public something themselves the public something themselves the public something the public something the public something themselves the public something the public som version, and the antics of a clown no longer make a circus any more than a mtrry-go-round, a cane rack and a frankfurter stand enclosed in a fence constitute an amusement park. eye must be pleased and above all the attraction must be clean and wholesome. Coney Island, with Luna Park and Dreamland cannot be transported from place to place, but every season has witnessed a decided step forward in the idea as seen in other cities. The latest feature in the plan is to furnish such attractions as have been recognized as leaders to amusement parks in the smaller cities where an attraction will be given for a run of four to eight weeks, cuit modeled on the lines similar to the even better in a very tight lining. great theatrical circuits. New shows in this way will be provided for the patrons of each city, and the attractions will be

The popularity of and the profit to be derived from such attratcions as E. J Austen's "Johnstown Flood" is indicated by the fact that during the Buffalo Exposition it brought its owners $167,000. It was then taken to Coney Island, and in three seasons cleared $90,000 over all expenses, making a grand total of $257, 000. Mr. Austen's "Galveston Flood" has also been a money maker, and his two productions, "Creation" and "From New York to the North Pole," each took in more than a quarter of a million dollars in six months.

To make money is the object of every business, and this is no less true of the amusement buisness than of any other, but the essential qualification of the amusement producer is ability to know what the public wants and how to pre sent it in its most attractive form an at the same time to keep clear of the questionable and tawdry features.

Until a few years ago Mrs. Cora B. Miller lived in manner similar to that of thousands of other very poor women of the average small town and village She now resides in her own palatial brown-stone res dence and is considered one of the most successfu business women in the United States.

Several years ago Mrs. Miller learned of a mild and simple preparation that cured herself and several friends of female weakness and piles. She was be steged by so many women needing treatment that she decided to furnish it to those who might call for it. She started with only a few dollars' capital, and the remedy possessing true and wonderful merit, pro ducing many cures when doctors and other remedies failed, the demand grew so rapidly she was severa times compelled to seek larger quarters. She now occupies one of the city's largest office buildings, which she owns, and almost one hundred clerks and stenographers are required to assist in this great

OWN A FACITORY

HAVE YOU WEAK LUNGS

Do you spit yellow and black matter? Are you continually coughing and hawking, losing flesh, have night sweats, bleeding from the lungs, ever and chills, weak voice, flat chest and pains in sides and under shoulder blades?

These were the exact symptoms present in the case of Mr. Wm. Schmidt. 1804 Coleman Street, St. Louis, Mo. (whose picture is here reproduced). This man was treated by the best St. Louis doctors, all of whom pronounced him in an incurable stage of Consumption (Tuberculosis). After getting no encouragement from the physicians he was taken to a prominent hospital and, after a thorough examination there, was informed that his right lung was almost entirely decomposed, that his was a hopeless case of consumption, and that all medical treatment would be of no avail. After receiving all of this discouraging information, Mr. Schmidt saw Lang-Germine advertised, and without a moment's delay he ordered the treatment and began its use. The result was that he was made a well mun after six months of Lung-Germine treatment had been used. This cure was established three years ago and he remains a strong and healthy man to this dey, with absolutely no trace of the dread disease in his system.

LUNG-GERMINE THE GERMAN TREATMENT FOR CONSUMPTION

has cured hundreds of cases just as serious as Mr. Schmidt's. If you have any of the above mamed symptoms we hope that you will regard them as a danger signal and the warning of Nature. Do not allow your condition to become more serious and deep scated. Satisfy yourself as to the correctness of our claims for Lung-Germine, and place yourself under this treatment at once. Every day you delay means another forward stride of this desperate malady. Lung-Germine treatment can be used, with all the benefits which it gives, in your own home.

IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO LEAVE YOUR HOME friends or business, and enter a sanitarium or go to a different climate. We shall be glad to send you full particulars and sample of the remedy absolutely free. Write us today and learn more about this successful treatment for Consumption.

"It is thought-it is feared-but nothing yet known. A letter lay on his desk directed to George Coris, and on the table a bottle which had contain-d chloroform. Presently she asked in a voice that was almost a whisper:

"Is there no letter for me?" "I don't know, mother. I have been scared, but I'll go and see." Left alone in the semi-darkened room, her grief and pity for Valerius, together with the fear which lay behind hem, overcame her, and she began to sob and cry hysterically. Seeing this, Veronica, on her return, could not keep back her tears, and they both wept bit-terly for some time. When eventually the girl was able to control herself and had partially succeeded in soothing her mother, she produced an envelope directed by Valerius and sealed with red wax, bearing his monogram. And the curtains having been drawn and the blinds raised, Olive Dumbarton with trembling hands opened the letter and read there the confession she had dreaded and anticipated.

Meanwhile all was confusion in the house where the body of Valerius Galbraith lay; servants going from room to room with a bewildered air; policemen going to and fro; the chilling, stagnating atmosphere of death weighing upon all. And among those who came and went was Mackworth, who, not without disappointment, realized that the case which had puzzled him had been brought to an end without his aid or intervention.

But the previous night the inspector had returned from Paris, whither he had gone, to ascertain for himself if Valerus had been there on the night of the Hoxton Road tragedy. Without much difficulty Mackworth had learned of Galbraith's absence from his hotel on that date, and armed with this fact further to trace the movements of the man who it now seemed possible was connected with Dumbarton's death. With morning Mackworth found his labors unnecessary. Valerius had escaped, leaving a letter which acknowledged his deed.

When in due time a jury had returned a verdict declaring Valerius Galbraith guilty of the death of David Dumbarton and the innocence alike of Olive and George Bostock was established. That the latter had confessed to a murder of which he had not been guilty was set down by the press and guilty was set down by the press and seemed a century, because of all the darkness it had held for both, when she suddenly interrupted him, for she could • had suffered, self-accusation being a not uncommon occurrence with those whose minds were temporarily affected by

As time passed George Bostock's consciousness, at first faint and flit-ting, gradually strengthened and re-tained its hold for longer periods; and tained its hold for longer periods; and five days after the last operation he was enabled to answer questions. His replies, which were always monosyllabic, seemed delivered with reluctance, and it was thought advisable not to tax his mind by addressing inquiries, or enlightening him regarding what had happened until his brain regained more of its former strength.

It was in the early summer that Quinton Quave, looking shy and nervous, came to tall Olive Dumbarton that, just having been taken into part-nership by his father, he was now in a position to marry.

"I heartly congratulate you, Quin-on," she said warmly.

She smiled at his earnestness.
"And I don't think Veronica will ever marry any man but me," he added, proudly. "She told me she wouldn't."
